The purpose of this thesis is to discuss how the novel Dracula, and how the character vampire Dracula, represent liminality. Unlike most theses relating Dracula to deconstruction, this thesis gives more weight to the idea of liminality, a state of standing in-between. Chapter One discusses how Stoker employs liminality to relieve his uncertainty about the future. Chapter Two is composed of three chapters. Chapter One elaborates on Dracula walking in a liminal world. Chapter Two summarizes the thesis with “reality-effect.” An effect represents neither truth nor reality. Chapter Three discusses how Dracula’s body can be represented through liminality. Chapter Four discusses how Dracula is represented from an established and fixed image. Liminality is a state of standing in-between and reading how the Victorian writers apply liminality to the vampire in this changing century.
