Abstract

Stanley Baker: A Life in Film (Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 2008) This is the first published academic study of the actor and producer Stanley Baker. The book makes use of extensive primary research including interviews with Baker and his collaborators, as well as archives and historical documents to provide a detailed assessment of his life from his impoverished childhood in the Welsh mining valleys to international success as star and producer of a wide range of issues relating to class, national identity and gender. These are explored through the specific examples of these themes on screen. The book also considers his role within film production in the 1960s and 1970s, his independent company and was then involved in the takeover of British Lion. Baker's public role within the industry, in the creation of HTV, is assessed. As well as examining the importance of his film work in its own right, the book also considers its significance to the wider culture of Wales through his articulation of a particular form of Welsh masculinity.
