Book : Not yet democracy: reforming land tenure in Tanzania. 1998 pp.xii + 132

Abstract : The problems of land tenure reform in Tanzania are addressed. In 1991, the Tanzanian government formed a Commission of Inquiry into Land (CILM) and published a report in 1992. The work of the Commission is placed in a broader context, setting its findings within the current democracy debate throughout all over Africa, including treatment of the proposed new Tanzania Land act. The report is divided into three parts. Problems of land tenure examines: the concep framework; problems of land tenure in the post-Arusha period I: nationaliza villagization; problems of land tenure in the post-Arusha period II: urbanizati liberalization; and towards a new land policy: preview of social forces. Demo land tenure: recommendations of the Land Commission examines: land teni structure; and institutional and legal framework. Debating land: the making c and the law examines: critiques of the report I: the radical title; critiques of t gender and land; law, land and justice; and contradictory perspectives on re law.
