Abstract:

This article discusses the relationship between Colin Ward and the British New Left in the 1950s and the 1960s. A deeply suspicious of Marxism, there were participants in the emerging and evolving New Left who were attracted to the libertarian tradition. Thus the complex relationship between leading figures of the Marxist New Left and Fre is disaggregated and similarities and differences are noted over, for example, the campaign for nuclear disarmament and the political legacy of George Orwell.
