Congregational analysis: A theological and ministerial approach

M Nel

Abstract

The research problem concerned is: What criteria should be used when congregations are analysed? (C) are defined differently. Identifying the local congregation as a defined and as an empirical subject pl research question. The theological points of departure taken are that any measure of a local congrega faithfulness to the gospel and the missional identity and integrity of the congregation as a contextual t that theologically informed and motivated congregations can and should be analysed in the process ( fi rst article described the approach and outcome of empirical research, this article focuses mainly on intermediary in its ministerial role-fulfi lment. Ministries are modes by which God is coming to his ov Eventually a case is made for congregational analysis as a test of faithfulness to this understanding of
