Differentiating among ministries today has become a complex task. For some the task is confusing because ministry crosses the traditional divide of 'ordained' and 'lay'. For an increasing number of others this divide is historically collapsed upon the realization that ministry is churchwide and derives from baptismal gifts. Both positions appear problematic as they move from contemporary vernaculars to the ministerial term for ministry in the New Testament. The modern reversion to a distinctive pastoral role among the charismata that does not arise from baptism but from the church's designation of less important than the nature of the ministry assigned.
