Abstract

The primary purposes of this study were to: 1) create an alphabetical list of songs by decade from the 1900s–1960s from four songbook series, which music therapists might utilize to locate songs for older adult populations, and 2) compare the songbook series list with the list from the VanWeelden and Cevasco (2007) study. Four songbook series were selected and analyzed for song title, publication date, publisher information, ISBN numbers, and number of pages for each volume. Duplicate listings were deleted so song titles were only listed once, regardless of decade, and compiled resulting in a master list of a total of 1,896 songs. Eighty-six of these songs were listed in all four series. Of the 288 songs listed from the VanWeelden and Cevasco (2007) study, 200 songs were also found within the master list in at least one of the four songbook series. Further results and clinical training implications are provided.
