Abstract:

This annotated bibliography is designed to provide brief analyses of a comprehensive selection of publications that exemplify the experience of Jewish lives in New Zealand from the earliest settlement records in 1828. These resources have been compiled from fictional and non-fictional sources; print, audio and visual materials from both Jewish and non-Jewish authors from inside and outside of New Zealand. They chronicle the eventful period before the first synagogues were built through the development of Jewish New Zealanders' unusual relationship with the Maori to the influx of refugees from World War II and their eventual assimilation into broader New Zealand culture.
