Abstract

The works of twenty women whom participated in the westwa between 1820 and 1920 are represented. The women have par emigration, homesteading, or simply living a trans-Mississippi aforementioned time period. The work as a whole provides a lifestyle and challenges of the period, which may highlight the woman, while at the same time showing some common experiences selected to represent as many states as possible, in as many times within the one hundred year time span, in an attempt to provide a bibliography. Overall, the diaries demonstrate the immediate and its long term significance. Writing was important to diarists for companionship and personal enjoyment. But without the diary history would be drastically diminished. If a goal of examining to better understand human nature, its complexities, strengths and pioneer women diaries are a rich source.
