The thesis presents my Maturity Quotient Model (MQM) for refining J. P. F. microscopically analysing the function of 'leaders response' during malfeasance to analyse, pre-empt, and remedy missionary leaders' malfeasance in this thesis presents the research's raison d'être, clarifies the meaning of 'malfeasance' to inherit the unfavourable historical biases left by their predecessors, and a negative views of them. The second part (1) presents my research findings on 'support levels' to examine missionary leaders' malfeasance, and (2) examines maturity using the works of Frankl, Samra, Erikson, Kao, the Via Triple Phase demonstrates that the lack of a suitable leadership model to examine the development of the MQM as the theoretical and practical framework for the findings. Of a sample of 76 active missionaries surveyed in Yakland in 2017, the degree predicted which of these missionaries were malfeasant. Support levels for malfeasance. While the MQ score gave an indication of who was at risk of malfeasance, it was inadequate for it to be used as a tool for reliably identifying malfeasance at the level. Missionaries in the Immature Phase, not the hypothesised Maturity Phase, malfeasance becomes markedly less likely at the watershed phase of malfeasance. Churches and mission agencies should be less concerned about the malfeasance of leaders who keep a closer watch on delta and gamma leaders who are more likely to be malfeasant and others. Stronger conclusions cannot be drawn because of the limitations of the study.
