The Year's Work in Children's Literature Studies: 1987

Compiled and edited by Gillian Adams with the assistance of members of the ChLA Awards Committee: Celia Anderson, Geraldine DeLuca, James Geliert, Joan Glazer, and Anita Wihon.

This is the second bibliography of articles compiled by the Awards Committee in ChLAQ; the first, for 1982, appeared in 1983. Since that time interest in children's studies has increased, and articles on children's literature and related areas are appearing with greater frequency in journals not exclusively devoted to the subject. The question of what properly constitutes children's literature continues to be hotly debated. I have made my decisions on what to include on two bases, at least one of which is suspect: I have included works like Uncle Tom's Cabin or Ivanhoe because they were read to me or given to me by family members to read as children's literature before I reached the age of 13; and because they appear in Carpenter and Pritchard's Oxford Companion to Children's Literature. I have also included important articles peripheral to children's literature, for example one on Nineteenth-Century views of corporal punishment, because they throw light on children's literature of the period.

The editor has requested that articles be placed in categories. The categories to be found in other bibliographies I have consulted do not fit the peculiar demands of children's studies, thus I found it best to use the categories found in the tables of contents of ChLAQ for 1987, with some additions. I have used the MLA biographical format with two exceptions: I have omitted the year since all articles cited, unless otherwise noted, appeared in 1987, and I have given the volume number of continuously paged journals, when transmitted to me by other members of the committee, for the greater convenience of researchers. In a few cases where the volume and number are not immediately obvious (e.g. School Library Journal), I have given the month and year. Those articles deemed by the committee as particularly worthy of note, either because of intrinsic merit or because they covered new ground, have an asterisk.

In an enterprise of this nature significant errors and omissions are inevitable. The committee welcomes notices of journals that should be searched and of articles that should have been included this year or that should appear next year. Omitted articles will appear in the 1988 bibliography, closing date July 1. Please send a photocopy or offprint of the article, particularly if it occurs in an unusual journal or a book of essays, if possible, otherwise send a notice in MLA format with a brief description (filecard preferred) to Gillian Adams, 4105 Ave C, Austin, TX, 78751.

The Year's Work in Children's Literature Studies: 1987

Compiled and edited by Gillian Adams with the assistance of members of the CILA Awards Committee: Celia Anderson, Geraldine DeLima, Joris Gullen, Joan Gunger, and Anja Wilton.

This is the second bibliography of studies compiled by the Awards Committee in CILAQ; the first (for 1982) appeared in 1983. Since that time interest in children's studies has increased, and articles on children's literature and related areas are appearing with greater frequency in journals not exclusively devoted to the subject. The question of what properly constitutes children's literature continues to be hotly debated. I have made my decisions on what to include on two bases, at least one of which is subject: I have included works like Uncle Tom's Cabin or Robbery because they were read to me or given to me by family members to read as children's literature before I reached the age of 13; also, because they appear in Classics and Proulx's Oxford Companion to Children's Literature. I have also included important articles peripheral to children's literature, for example one on Nineteenth-Century views of corporal punishment, because they throw light on children's literature of the period.

The editor has requested that articles be placed in categories. The categories to be found in other bibliographies I have consulted do not fit the particular concerns of children's studies, thus I found it best to use the categories found in the tables of contents of CILAQ for 1987, with some additions. I have used the MLA bibliographical format with two exceptions: I have omitted the year since all articles cited, unless otherwise noted, appear in 1987, and I have given the volume number of multi-volume paginated journals, when requested to me by other members of the committee, for the greater convenience of researchers. In a few cases where the volume and number are not immediately obvious (e.g. School Library Journal), I have given the month and year. Those articles directed by the committee as particularly worthy of note, either because of critical merit or because they covered new ground, have an asterisk.

In an enterprise of this nature significant errors and omissions are inevitable. The committee solicited notices of journals that should be searched and of articles that should have been included this year or that should appear next year. Omitted articles will appear in the 1988 bibliography, closing date July 1987.

Please send a photocopy or reprint of the article, particularly if it occurs in an unusual journal or a book of essays, if possible, or send a notice in MLA form with a brief descriptor (if send preferred) to Gillian Adams, 4103 Ave C Acadia, TX, 76713.
