[-] Abstract and Keywords

This article maps out the crucial role and responsibilities of corporate social responsibility (CSR) in developing countries. It begins by proposing a model of CSR in developing countries, which is conducted at a global and regional level, before considering recommendations for future research. Finally, it proposes a model of CSR in developing countries. What is clear from this rich and fascinating area of enquiry, which is becoming increasingly important since it is profoundly under-researched, this enquiry allows us to gain the knowledge and understanding about CSR.
