The theme of "Al-Andalus" has featured prominently in the Arabic novel from the novel's earliest stages to its most recent maturation. This article examines the connections between the temporal and spatial significations of Al-Andalus in three Arabic novels, from the historical/romantic, social realist, and modernist genres. It argues that writing Al-Andalus is a nostalgic quest for a glorious past. These novelists take a critical view of contemporary society and rework Al-Andalus as a blueprint for the future. In short, the historical consciousness of the "Andalusian" novel reflects on, explains, and critiques the current state of affairs in the Arab world. Generally, this study reiterates the homologous relationship between the political and intellectual trajectory of modern Arabic literature.

emphasis is on Arab Nationalism, and the development of the Arabic novel.
