Abstract:

As existential psychotherapists in economically uncertain and pressured times we face a dilemma. How do we r that values science over art -- a culture that, within the medical setting of the NHS, increasingly threatens to coi calculations and the ground-rules of science? Where is our ground? If we see ourselves as practising an art of ps shift our ground to conform more to the scientific context? Working in Palliative Care in an acute hospital settir with what is most terrible: the uncertain landscape of death and of grief, the dark forces of illness, and decay. H patients to find a path through the darkness and desolation towards light and life? Confronted with this landscap proposes a path through art rather than science. And so I turn to Nietzsche. I suggest that from Nietzsche's earl direction is offered, it is a doctrine on aesthetics. Offered up in his first work, The Birth of Tragedy, it is a guidin his writing, through to his last notebooks. Through art, Nietzsche tells us, we find our strength, our resilience, as poets of our lives. I will demonstrate this with case illustration.
