The use of an improved access structure in dictionaries

RH Gouws

Abstract

Dictionary consultation procedures often fail because the structure of a dictionary impedes the user. Modern-day metalexigraphy has identified the access structure as one of the most important structural factors. This paper focuses on a few aspects of the access structure. It is argued that a frame structure and an improved access to the lexicographic data. Different macrostructural ordering procedures are discussed and it is argued that bilingual dictionaries should avoid multiple niching. The presentation of inner texts in clearly identifiable ways can help the user in rapidly reaching the desired search zone. Although the emphasis is on bilingual dictionaries, the same principles apply to monolingual dictionaries.

Keywords: metalexigraphy, lexicography, dictionary, bilingual, access structure, frame structure, multiple niching, inner text, outer text
