Abstract:

ABSTRACT FROM BARNYARDS TO BEDSIDES TO BOOKS AND BEYOND: THE EVOLUTION OF REGISTERED PSYCHIATRIC NURSING IN MANITOBA, 1955-1980 In the 1950s, psychiatric nursing in Canada was a part of general nursing. To the west of Manitoba, it was evolving into a form of either the eastern or western model. But in 1960, it achieved the same distinct professional status as the other three western provinces. This study is an examination of the factors that swayed Manitoba to adopt the western psychiatric nursing model in its first twenty years. The factors are: male collegiality with the leaders of the other three western provinces; the influence of the based Canadian Council of Psychiatric Nurses, the encouragement of medical superintendents to create an alternative workforce, and the lack of interest by general nurses in working in the provincial mental health system. This study also examines the evolution of the profession during its first twenty years, the development of a professional ideology, and establish a place for itself in the Manitoba mental health system through professional legislation. A genealogical analysis was used to examine data which came from archival sources. Findings suggest that registered psychiatric nursing in Manitoba is a contingent and political construction that developed in unique ways through an ongoing examination of its roots, icons, practices, and philosophy.
