Religious violence in Nigeria: Causal diagnoses and strategic recommendations to the state and religious communities

IT Sampson

Abstract

The literature on religious violence in Nigeria largely implicates socio-economic, political and governance factors as the underlying causes of such violence. This article, however, departing from the underlying causes approach, undertakes an analysis of the socio-economic, political and governance factors and visible factors that trigger religious conflicts in the country. It also evaluates the nature of state management of religious conflicts in Nigeria and posits that government's haphazard approach to these conflicts as well as the absence of effective management account for their persistent manifestation. Drawing from the findings made, recommendations to curbing religious violence in the country are proffered.
