This book examines the structure and content of the European Community's immigration law from the perspective of the individual. It discusses the rights and duties of the individual and the individual's relationship of rights with the law of the European Community. The author presents a historical analysis of the development of the European Union to facilitate a better understanding of the current law and to lay a foundation for the future. It charts this development from the conclusion of the EEC Treaty to the present day. It focuses on the development of laws relating to Community immigration law, third country national dependants and looks at the extension of Community immigration law to third country nationals through agreements between their states of origin and the European Community.
