Pentecostals have been hesitant to reflect theologically on their ecclesiology, instead focusing on the pragmatics of mission. Theological reflection would help Pentecostals integrate their distinctives into a robust ecclesiology. This essay is a contribution to a Pentecostal ecclesiology that is Trinitarian, missional and eschatological in scope. Succinctly, Pentecostal ecclesiology is a response to the triune God, who constitutes the Church as a sent and sending community, calling the Church to live out its missional life of God.
