Re-using Qualitative Research Data: a Personal Account

Paul Thompson

Abstract

This paper describes three experiences of reanalysing data. The first is that of myself, primarily the much-used dataset "Family and Work Conditions in the 1970s", and the extent to which this has created difficulties and gains. This was published as Growing Up in Stepfamilies, in which we tried to interweave the strengths of life story interviews with data from a quantitative longitudinal study, the National Child Development Study. The third is my current project on the use of I have been using parallel interviews collected by Mary CHAMBERLAIN.
