Abstract in Portuguese

Esta pesquisa tem como enfoque a Cadeia Pública e a Casa de Correção localizadas na cidade de São Paulo, durante a vigência do Código Penal (1830-1890). Primeiramente, procuramos analisar o impacto das formulações do código de 1830 na dinâmica da Cadeia Pública, conforme o Livro V das Ordenações Filipinas. Em seguida, observamos a concepção da Casa de Correção, sua difícil construção até 1850, que se insere no contexto das transformações políticas ocorridas no período e parece responder à demanda de ordem pública. Em seguida, ponderamos que as propostas de modernização dos aparelhos repressores, baseadas nos modelos europeus de correção, não puderam ser efetivamente organizadas, especialmente levando-se em conta o crescimento populacional da cidade em grande escala. Paralelamente, procuramos estudar o perfil da população carcerária das duas instituições, tendo como base os trabalhos realizados pelos presos. Assim, observamos como funcionavam as oficinas da Casa de Correção, os trabalhos públicos realizados pelos presos livres e dos escravos detidos no calabouço. Em seguida, na outra ponta, estudamos os guardas e empregados dos estabelecimentos e que tipo de relações estabeleceram com aqueles que vigiavam.

Abstract in English

This study focuses on the jail and the Penitentiary located in the city of São Paulo while the Criminal Code of the Empire sought to assess the impact of the provisions of the 1830 Code on the dynamics of the Capital City Jail, previously ruled by Book V. After that, we analyzed the Penitentiary conception, the pitfalls of its construction works up to the partial opening of the political changes that occurred along this period and seems to be an answer to the call for organization and restructuring that the proposals for modernization of the coercive apparatus based on European and North- American models of public works effectively organized mainly due to the population growth and costly large scale implementation. In addition, we studied the institutions based on the works and tasks performed by the inmates. Therefore, we observed the Penitentiary's workshop, the work of free African people and slaves imprisoned in dungeons. Finally, we studied the guards and other employees, their work and the kind of relationship they developed with the inmates.
