Abstract : In experiments on 3 bedding plant species (Verbena, Torenia and Impatiens), propagated from cuttings, the effects of inoculating the rooting substrate (30% perlite) with arbuscular mycorrhizal fungi (Glomus spp.), or Trichoderma harzianum spraying plants with Previcur (prothiocarb) fungicide were studied. Mycorrh significantly increased fresh weight, dry weight and total shoot length of Verbena and dry weight and total shoot length of Torenia plants. Mycorrhizal inoculation had no effect on leaf colour of all three species, particularly before transplanting. T. harzianum had no effect on any growth parameter nor leaf colour. Inoculating plants with T. harzianum had no detrimental effect on the benefits of mycorrhizal inoculation. Application of fungicide had a slightly improved leaf colour, and significantly increased total shoot length of all three species of plants.
