Abstract

This thesis is concerned with the changes to a forest landscape over two and a half centuries. It examines the changes that were wrought by human activity over two and a half centuries.

changes the author has focused on five private estates within Coolhurst and Leonardslee, and two villages in the Forest, Co

The five estates are considered with regard to ownership and villages are examined for their growth, the profile of the population endowments of the parish churches are outlined along with ties to Magdalen College, Oxford. Paternalism was a theme in Footpath Dispute demonstrated a move away from these attitudes private property rights.

For the first time this study pulls together the numerous and St. Leonard's Forest. It explores the factors both social and economic of the nearby expanding market town of Horsham with its large and the attitudes of individual Forest landowners all combined in 1750 to a place of desirable picturesque estates and expansion was to change the Forest landscape yet again.
