Abstract:

The paper deals with Mikalojus Konstantinas iurlionis' admiration for Arnold Böcklin analyzed on the background of the popularity at the turn of the 19th and 20th centuries. Signs of this admiration are quite evident in early works by the artist. Also in the Young Poland period we can find many references to the Böcklin's oeuvre, most of them connected with the symbolist concept of artistic creation according to which the skill in transforming well-known motifs was more valued than originality. What counted most then was to make variations, which naturally challenged iurlionis as a meanwhile established painter and composer.
