Bureau Men, Settlement Women: Constructing Public Administration in the Progressive Era

Camilla M. Stivers

Description

During the first two decades of the Progressive Era, men and women struggled for urban reform. Men pushed for scientific and business practices, while women pushed for settlement house movements, social services and then getting government involved. This book offers a rare look at the early Progressive Era through the book to examine the subject of public administration, the contributions of women to the government, and commitment to public service. Ultimately more successful
