Abstract and Keywords

This article aims to help both students and practitioners understand public diplomacy and modernization more clearly. It first outlines criticisms and their conceptual implications of such criticisms. The article then points out that the juxtaposition of traditional approaches and their evolution. It examines the public diplomacy of different actors and their working relationship with states, so as to point out how they can enhance their public diplomacy potential. The article situates public diplomacy in a 'polylateral' world of multiple actors in which the state is part of international networks.
