Therapists in mourning

Psychotherapy in Australia
Volume 20 Issue 1 (Nov 2013)

Shaw, Elisabeth

Abstract: Recently my treasured aunt died. I was struck by many competing imperatives: the need to be with the shock, and the need to keep going; the need to go to the funeral, and the fear it would fall on a day that would require a lot of rescheduling; the desire to give my aunt room in my mind and heart, while also 'suddenly' finding so many stories of grief in my caseload that also required my careful attention.
