Works of tremendous energy and ambition during the past few years have enriched our insights into early contact between Europeans and the indigenous peoples of the Americas in large part by shouldering the challenge of understanding alternative, nonalphabetic writing systems. Annette Kolodny, in her pioneering book In Search of First Contact: The Vikings of Vinland, the Peoples of the Dawnland, and the Anglo-American Anxiety of Discovery (2012), deciphers Mi'kmaq pictographic bark scrolls with the help of Mi'kmaq elders in an effort to recover native understandings of early contact with Europeans. Birgit Rasmussen's Queequeg's Coffin: Indigenous Literacies and Early American Literature (2012) discusses Ashinaabeg birch bark scrolls, Incan quipu, and Haudenosaunee wampum, among other non-Western notational frameworks. Both studies challenge conventional ideas of what constitutes a literary source.

Anna Brickhouse shares these scholars' interest...
