[-] Abstract and Keywords

Papyrologists have many archives but only one Greek library that had once been on the shore of the bay of Naples. The excavations of the villa of Papyrius at Herculaneum began in 1709, when workers digging a well 100 feet below the surface. The excavations came under the direction of the king, Charles III, in 1734 and whose king, Charles III, ordered the tunnels to be used as a source of decoration for his own palace, located not far from the site. A pestilential emanation, mephitic, fact led to the premature termination. In July 1750, Roque Joaquín de Alcubierre put the highly skilled workers supervising the excavations.
