The purpose of this paper is to argue for a presyntactic approach to the middle construction in Mandarin Chinese. The subjecthood of the clause-initial NP in this construction is thus not true that these sentences may only be derived from a clause-initial NP and Thompson (1981) propose. It is further argued that is base-generated as external argument of the middle verb is suppressed and present only at some presyn middle formation in Mandarin Chinese is supported constructions involving intransitive V-de resultative and inchoatives. The findings of this study thus lend (1996) that middle formation is not homogeneous a
