Abstract:

The author believes that the most important lesson of Claude Lévi-Strauss is the claim that anthropology is a tra its definition of structure goes to this direction. It also holds, however, that the failure of its structuralism is due intolerable reduction of the wealth of aspects of the ethnographic reality with the purpose to predispose a fram possibilities (closed system). The author proposes to rehabilitate the thesis of anthropology as a transversal (cro knowledge resorting to Wittgenstein's idea of family resemblances: a flexible approach (open system) that fits th characteristics of anthropological research.
