Abstract

Abstract This article discusses a story about a Jewish-Christian interaction during a drought that appears in the Verbum abbreviatum and R. Judah the Pious' Sefer Hasidim. I suggest that the two authors had a common source, none earlier so that R. Judah might have based his story on an account based on Peter the Chanter's story, whether tale, the article points to narrative strategies used by both authors and to what they can tell us about Jewish a other's religious practice and belief in medieval Christian Europe.
