Abstract

Death is a life crisis, a time of change and transformation, for the dead and the bereaved. Thus how dying, death is used, described, presented and interpreted is fundamental to any society. This volume includes ten chapters, from ten contributors, which explore funerary rituals and commemoration in the Roman world, focusing upon the then mourning. How were the memories of the dead constructed and contested; what role did funerals, oratory and promoting the names of the dead; how were the dead mourned and commemorated?
